What Six Very Short Stories in the Babylonian Talmud Tell Us About Jewish Law and Life

Dr. Judith Hauptman

Judith Hauptman is the E. Billi Ivry Professor Emerita of Talmud and Rabbinic Culture at The Jewish Theological Seminary. Dr. Hauptman’s scholarly research focuses on two areas. The first is unraveling the mystery of how the Talmud came into being—i.e., how the many strands of rabbinic teachings coalesced into one coherent document. Her second area of research involves investigating women’s roles in Judaic thought, bringing an evaluation of the social and ethical norms of the rabbinic period into dialogue with contemporary issues.

Dr. Hauptman has authored several books in the areas of her research. Her book, Rereading the Rabbis: A Woman’s Voice is now available at no charge on Sefaria.org. In addition, her newest volume, The Stories They Tell, Halakhic Anecdotes in the Babylonian Talmud, is coming out in September. A popular lecturer and writer, Dr. Hauptman has also authored many influential articles.

In 2004, not long after her ordination as a rabbi, she founded Ohel Ayalah, an outreach project to young Jews on the margins, named in memory of her mother. Dr. Hauptman received a degree in Talmud from the Seminary College of Jewish Studies at JTS (now Albert A. List College of Jewish Studies) and a degree in Economics from Barnard College, and earned an MA and a PhD in Talmud from JTS. In May 2003, she was ordained as a rabbi by the Academy for Jewish Religion.
1. Babylonian Talmud, Yevamot 37b, Taking a wife-for-a-day when on the road

Moreover, R. Eliezer b. Ya’akov said: A man should not take one wife in one province and then go and take [another] wife in another province, lest [the children of the two wives] marry each other and it turns out that a brother marries a sister.

[Stam asks:] Is that so [i.e., is that in fact the law]?! For when Rav visited Dardashir he [announced and] said, “who will [marry me] for one day?” and when R. Nahman visited Shekhnaziv, he [announced and] said, “who will [marry me] for one day?”

[Stam answers:] Rabbis are an exception, for [people] know their names.

2. Babylonian Talmud, Moed Qatan 27b, Exchanging meals on the first day of mourning

R. Judah (BA 2) said that Rav (BA 1) said: A mourner may not eat his own food on the first day [of the mourning period]. As God [literally, the merciful One] said to Ezekiel (24:17), “Do not eat the bread of men.”

Rabbah (BA 3) and R. Yosef (BA 3) exchanged meals with each other [when in mourning].
3. Babylonian Talmud, Eruvin 104a, Producing sounds on the Sabbath

Ulla (JA 3) visited the home of R. Menashe (BA 3) [on a Sabbath]. A man came and knocked on the door. Ulla said: Who is this [who knocks on a door on the Sabbath]? Let his body be desecrated because he has desecrated the Sabbath! Said Rabbah (BA 3) to him: the rabbis have only prohibited musical sounds [on the Sabbath and not the sounds made by knocking on a door].

4. Babylonian Talmud, Yoma 73b; 78a, Wearing shoes on Yom Kippur

Mishnah Yoma 8:1 On Yom Kippur one is forbidden to eat and drink, to bathe, to anoint [one’s body], to wear sandals, and to engage in sexual relations. . . .

R. Judah (BA 2) went forth in [footgear made of] reeds [on Yom Kippur].
Abaye (BA 4) in [footgear made of] palm-branches [on Yom Kippur].
Rava (BA 4) in [footgear made of] twisted reeds [on Yom Kippur].
Rabbah b. R. Huna (BA 3) tied a piece of cloth around his legs and went out [on Yom Kippur].
Babylonian Talmud, Besah 25b, Sedan Chair Transport on a Festival

When Hama bar Ada arrived [there], R. Ya’akov bar Idi had died. So he went and encountered R. Zeriqa (JA 3) and said to him: What do you [hold] regarding a sedan chair? He said to him: “Thus said R. Ammi (JA 3): so long as he does not carry it on his shoulders.”

[Stam asks:] What does “so long as he does not carry it on his shoulders” mean?

R. Yosef the son of Rava (BA 5) said: “[not] on a palanquin [which is carried on the shoulders].”

[Stam asks:] Is that so!? Did not R. Nahman permit Yalta to go out on a palanquin [on a festival]?

[Stam answers:] The case of Yalta is an exception because she was afraid.

Amemar (BA 5/6) and Mar Zutra (BA 6) were carried on the shoulders on the Sabbath of the festival because of fear, or some say, because of pressing crowds.
6.1 Babylonian Talmud, Pesahim 100b-101a, Reciting kiddush where one eats the Sabbath meal

And Shmuel is consistent with his own rule, for Shmuel said, one must recite kiddush at the place where one dines.

[Stam comments:] They thought this meant from house to house [he must repeat kiddush if he moves from one house to another]. But if he recites kiddush in one place in his own home and then decides to dine in a different place in his own home, he need not [recite kiddush a second time].

[Not so!] R. Anan bar Tahlifa said (BA 2): many times I was standing before Shmuel [to serve him or dine with him] and he went down from the roof to the ground [floor] and recited kiddush a second time [after reciting it for the first time on the roof].

6.2

[Stam says:] And R. Huna (BA 2) also holds, one must recite kiddush at the place where one dines.

For R. Huna recited kiddush, and then his lamp went out, and they brought his utensils to his son Rabbah’s (BA 3) chambers, where there was light, and he recited kiddush [a second time] and tasted a little bit of food.
And Rabbah holds:

And Abaye:

For Abaye (BA 4) said: when we were at the master’s home, and he would recite kiddush, he would say to us, taste something [here], for perhaps when you go to your lodgings [to eat the Sabbath meal] the lamp will go out on you and you will not be able to recite kiddush at the place where you [planned to] eat the Sabbath meal. As for the kiddush [that you heard] here, you will not have discharged your obligation, because kiddush must be recited at the place where one eats [the Sabbath] meal.
